Art and Science, as we ſee not onely in common, but even in the moſt grave and ſerious Profeſſions, being innumerable, my intention being to ſet forth the eaſieſt and ſhorteſt way for one who is deſirous to play at this game, to atchieve his deſires, and for him who is but an eaſie proficient, to ariſe almoſt to the higheſt degree of well playing, which he ſhall attain to, if he diligently peruſe this Book, and not onely learn, but examine the reaſon of the following Gambetts (practiſed by the beſt of our Nation) wherein he may obſerve observe such deep and intricate designes, with such admirable and answerable events, as may instruct him to lay such like plots of his own, as also to foresee and prevent the endeavours of his adversary, with unexpected counterplots, to the gaining of such pieces from him, as will give him so much advantage, that he may easily destroy all the rest, and then (if not before) give him Check mate. I forgot to tell you one thing, that a Gambett signifies here a game, so contrived, that he which loseth shall have a palpable reason for every remove he maketh, whereas the reaſons of the removes of the winner are ſo hard to be found out, that they ſeem rather prepoſterous, and unfitting, which ſheweth the excellent contrivance and invention of the Authors of them.

SIr, now unravell'd is the Golden Fleece,
Men that could onely fool at Fox and Geese
Are new-made Politians by the Book,
And can both judge and conquer with a look.
The hidden fates of Princes you unfold,
Court, Clergy, Commons, by your laws controll'd.
Strange ſerious wantoning! All that they
Bluſter'd & clutter'd wiſely for, you play.

Upon Cheſſe-play. To Dr. Budden.

TO thee Lawes Oracle, who hadſt the power
To wage my pens imployment for an hour,
I ſend no Frogs, nor Mice, Pigmees nor Cranes,
Giants nor Gods, which trouble ſo the braines
Of feighning Poets; nor my leaſure ſings
The Counterbuffs of the foure painted Kings:
Thoſe worthy Combatants have had their times,
And Battells ſung in thouſand curious rimes.

Of paſſing timbred men, all heart of Oake;
Men that ſcorne Armes defenſive, nor, in heat
Of bloudy broiles, complaine of duſt or ſweat.
Men that doe thinke, no victory is fit
That's not compacted by the reach of wit.
Men that an Ambuſcado know to lay,
T'entrap the Foe in his retiring way,
Plot Stratagems, and teach their braines t'indite
What place is fitteſt to employ their might.
Dull down-right blowes, are fit for ruſtick wits,

That's to his Standart: If there be report
Of the Kings danger, all troops may resort. (swell
But now they sound Alarm, each heart doth
With wrath, strikes in the name of Christabell;
Strike, strike, be not agast, Soldiers are bound
To feare no death, much lesse to dread a wound.
Now with mercy dies the common Troop,
A Rook a Bishop, and a Knight doth droop;
Yet neither boasts of Conquest, though each hope
To win the field, which now is half laid ope
By soldiers death; now dares a martial Queen
Check her Foe King, when strait there steps be-
A ventrous Soldier, or a Noble-man (tween
Who cares not for his life, so he can
From danger keep his King; he feares not death,
In Princes cause, that gives each Subject breath.
But this Virago dyes, being left alone,
When straight a nimble Soldier steppeth on,
And through the thickest Troops hews out his way,
And till he come to th' head doth never stay.
This brave attempt deserves the honouring;
The Queens colours are his, given by the King:
Who knowes that valour should not want reward,
And ventrous Spirits, best keep Princes guard.
Now is the War in heat, bloody the Field,
Mercy is baniſh'd, none hath thought to yeild,
Basely to beg his breath; the fame now ran,
That they must fight it out to the last man.
All Soldiers die, but one, who to his King, (bring,
Griev'd with his great losse, doth this comfort
That

That their great Foe, whose Troops are all now dead,
Must to their swords, yeild up his conquer'd head.
Then with their Check, and check on either hand,
The poore disheartned King doth mated stand.
Though thus to dye it be the Princes fate,
Who dares pronounce he had a whisking mate;
Who, rather than mumping forego the Field,
Joyes in the place he stands, his breath to yeild?
But now the conquering couple want their breath
Their festered wounds doe rankle, and grim death
Creeps through the gashes, down the Villers fall,
And then one generall Herse entombs them all.

To the Right Honourable,

MONTAGUE,

Earle of Lindſey, &c.

THe Conſideration, that to finde out a certaine Rule for this Princely Game of Cheſſe, is generally, (and I think, juſtly) eſteemed to be impoſsible, was the firſt cauſe that invited me to publiſh theſe Gambetts, which doe, in a very great meaſure, ſupply the defect of

 ſuch

ſuch an advantage, which in reſpect they were in the Delights of his late Majeſty, and many of the Nobility of theſe Kingdomes, I preſumed to dedicate unto your Honour, whom I have underſtood not onely to take pleaſure, but to be very judicious in this Incomparable Recreation, beſide the particular relation of the Duty I have to ſubmit my ſelf, on all occaſions, unto your Honours Cenſure and Commands, and the neceſsity I have of deſi-desiring your Lordships Protection for that I have attempted to publish, that which some Gentlemen have already in Manuscript, and peradventure to their displeasure; Instructions also for Learners being already in Print, and very plaine, might have deterr'd me from medling, as it were, w^th^ another mans work; but for these, I have excuse, that these Gambetts being so beneficiall, cannot but be very acceptable, and also give invitation to those who are but small ſmall Proficients, to take a greater delight, than formerly, in this Paſtime; and alteration of the Inſtructions being made more brief, are conſequently more uſefull. I am onely therefore to crave your Honours Pardon, for diſturbing your Honours more ſerious Contemplations with theſe trifles; which if I have, I ſhall reſt ſecure from Calumny, that can be throwne upon

Your Honours moſt humble Servant,

THE GAME OF CHESSE-PLAY.

CHAP. I.

Of the Antiquities and Inventors of this Game.

DIverſe are the opinions of the antiquity of this game of Cheſs. Some thinke that it was inventeд by Palamedes one of the chief Commanders of the Græcian forces at the ſiege of Troy. Others that Xerxes the great King of Perſia deviſed it: but the moſt received opinion is, that at that ſiege or ſome other place blocked up by their adverſaries, by ſome of the moſt learned and experienced beſiegers, meeting and clubbing their inventions together, this inimitable game was found out: and the rather, becauſe who ever playes at it ſhall not be able to carry on any deſigne with any ſucceſſe, or underſtand the plots of his adverſary without his whole intention is fixed upon it, and he be abſtracted from all other contemplation.

Chap. II.

Of the ſhapes, names, and places of the Cheſſe-men.

Although in all Countries the ſhapes of the Cheſſe-men are not the ſame, yet are the figures framed ſo diſtinctly from one another, that they never breed any confuſion: The Cheſſe-board therefore (which is divided into ſixty foure ſquare houſes) ſtanding (as uſually) with the white corner to the right hand, the firſt and higheſt generally called the King, ſtandeth in the fourth houſe from the corner of the board in the lower rank, with this obſervation, that the white King muſt ſtand in black, and the black King in the white: where note that every piece ſtandeth right over his adverſaries piece of the ſame ſort.

The next in height is the Queen or Amazon, who is placed in the fourth houſe from the corner of the field by the ſide of her King, and alwayes in her owne colour; whence

Rex albus in atro, Rex ater in albo, ſervat Regina colores.

Next to the Kings other ſide place a Biſhop or Archer, who is commonly figured with his head cloven, next to him the Knight, and in the corner of the field: the Rooke, Rock, or Duke who is ſometimes faſhioned with a round head ſometimes like a Caſtle, &c. So alſo on the Queen ſide ſide, place her Biſhop Knight & Rook, who always ſtand in different colours to thoſe of the King.

Laſtly, before each Great man ſtandeth their particular pawne or Serving-man, ſo that the King and Queen have three great men and four pawnes apiece.

Chap. III.

Of the draught, guard, worth, and Prerogative of each piece, and firſt of a Pawne.

The draught of a Pawne is only one houſe at a time ſtreight forward in his owne file never retiring; but he differs from all other pieces, in that it doth not take the adverſe pieces as it goeth, but that which ſtandeth aſlope in the next houſe forward of the next file on either hand, and then goeth forward upon occaſion as at firſt; now as all other pieces doe, he guardeth any piece of his owne ſide juſt as he taketh, that is, if a piece of his ſide ſtandeth in that place where if it were an adverſe piece he might take it, he then doth guard it, ſo alſo doth he check, that is, (give notice to) the adverſe King that he can take him, which check if the King cannot avoid either by taking him up himſelfe if he be unguarded (for a King can at no time remove into checke) or by cauſing him to be taken up by ſome other of his pieces, it is checke Mate, and the Game loſt. This is the draught of the Pawne who though it be of leaſt value, yet hath it thre, great priviledges.

The firſt is, that whereas his remove is but one houſe forward at a time, yet every pawne for his firſt draught, may remove two houſes forward.

The ſecond is, that if any pawne commeth up to the fourth ranke of the adverſe party, if any of his pawnes of the next file on either ſide doe remove two houſes at one time, that is beyond his guard, he may take him as if he had removed but one.

The third and greateſt is, that if any Pawne can arrive unto any houſe of the uppermoſt ranke of the adverſary, you may immediately make him a Queen, or what piece you have already loſt, (yea in forraigne Countries, and amongſt the beſt players, here you may have two or three Queens at a time) who ſhall be able at that very inſtant, to check the adverſe King, and uſe all power the Piece you make him hath.

CHAP.

Chap. IV.

Of the Biſhops, and Knights.

NExt in value above a Pawne are Biſhops and Knights. The Biſhops walke is, alwayes in the ſame colour he is firſt placed in, forward and backward aſlope as far as you pleaſe, and the way is cleare betwixt him and the place you intend to remove him to, ſo doth he guard any piece of his own ſide; take any of the contrary, and check the adverſe King, which unavoided by either taking or cauſing him to be taken up, or interpoſing ſome piece between him and the King, it is Check mate.

The Knights draught is forward and backward on either hand aſlope from the place he ſtandeth in, to the next ſave one of another colour, skipping over any piece that ſtandeth in his way; and in the ſame manner doth he guard, take, and check; which check, becauſe (as the Pawnes check) it cannot be covered, the King muſt either remove out of check, or cauſe him to be taken, for he cannot take him himſelfe, it is Check mate. Now the difference of worth betweene the Biſhops and Knights is uncertaine, ſome preferring one, ſome the other, as they play beſt with either of them themſelves, or obſerve it in their adverſary: but generally the Knights are more eſteemed, becauſe their walks have more variety, that is, into all the ſixty foure houſes, but a Biſhops walke is, but through thirty two of them: A Knight likewiſe guardeth three houſes before he doth remove, and eight when he is from the ſide of the ſite, whereas the Biſhop guardeth but two houſes in his firſt place, and but foure afterward; Thirdly, the Knights can guard one another, which the Biſhops cannot doe, becauſe they move into one anothers colour: Fourthly, a Knights check cannot be covered, but a Biſhops may, and I cannot ſee, but that the two Knights and a King may give a mate though not ſo well as the Biſhops, but it is hard for either of them to doe it.

Chap. V.

Of the Rookes, Queene, and King.

THe Rocks, Rookes or Dukes walk forward, backward, and ſide-wayes in any rank and file (but not aſlope as the Biſhops do) unto any place; ſo alſo doe they guard, take, and check, which check, if not avoided the game is loſt: Now a Rookes worth is as great as both a Biſhops and a Knights, becauſe he goeth over all the board which the Biſhop cannot, and though the Knight may, yet his remove is confined to a certaine diſtance, when the Rookes is unlimited where there is no interpoſition, and although he guards no more places then the Biſhop doth, yet he can give mate with the King alone, which no piece elſe beſide the Queen can doe; his Priviledge is to change with the King as you ſhall ſee in the Kings Prerogative.

But the Queen is in value equall to any two pieces: Her remove being forward, backward, ſide-waye, and aſlope, but not as the Knight doth as far as ſhe will if ſhe meet no oppoſition, ſhe in like manner doth guard the pieces of her owne ſide, take the enemy and check his King which unavoided is Mate: She guardeth five houſes in her firſt place, and eight when ſhe is from the ſide of the file.

The King removeth but one houſe at a time forward, backward, ſide-wayes, and aſlope to any place not poſſeſſed by his owne men, or guarded by the enemy where he may take any piece of the enemies; but there muſt be alwayes the diſtance of one houſe between the two Kings, for they can neither check nor take one another, he guardeth as many places as the Queen doth. His Prerogative is Firſt, that no piece can take him, but muſt only ſalute him with the word check.

Secondly, whereas his draught is but one houſe at a time, yet for his greater ſafety, if neither he nor either of the Rookes have as yet ſtirred out of their places, and there is no piece ſtanding between them, he may change (or Caſtle) with this Rooke, that is, he may goe two draughts at once towards this Rooke on which hand ſoever he ſtandeth, cauſing the Rooke to ſtand next to him on either ſide; this may he doe at any time before check, or after check. In France the Rook when the King changeth, goeth into the Kings houſe.

Chap. VI.

Obſervations in playing the game.

HAving now diſcovered the places, removes, guards, worth and Prerogative of each piece, I will now ſhew you ſome obſervations in the removall of them: but whereas there is 64 houſes in the Cheſſe-board, there may be conſequently as many varieties of games as 64 can be altered which are more then there have been minutes ſince the Creation, therefore there is no ſuch rule found out at this game, as who ſhall play according to it, muſt neceſſarily win the game: however there may be ſuch precepts and directions given, that whoſoever ſhall careſully obſerve and remember upon occaſion to put them in uſe, ſhall have great advantage againſt him that hath them not, ſo that the following adviſes and Gambetts well ſtudied will be inſtead of a rule to direct you how to advance and retire, how to take opportunities, as alſo how to deſigne upon your adverſary to foreſee and prevent his ſtratagemes, with a returne upon himſelſe: For certainly he that hath before his eyes & in his memorie many games well played ſhall be able to make ſuch obſervations upon them, as may ſtand him in great ſtead when ever the enemy ſhall fall into ſuch a poſture of game

as he hath formerly ſeen, and remembreth the diſadvantage he is liable to.

The firſt thing therefore you are to indeavour is, to get the firſt remove, for it is of great advantage: for which gameſters ſtrive ſeverall wayes according to their agreement between themſelves, but when a game is ended he is to have it, who winneth it, unleſſe you make it otherwiſe. Now for the firſt draught it is generally eſteemed beſt to remove the Kings pawne two houſes, becauſe if not prevented (by the like play) you may ſtill move that pawne forward with good guard, which will be very prejudiciall to the adverſary.

The ſecond thing obſervable is to play your men in good guard of one another, that if any man you advance be taken, the adverſe piece may be taken againe by the piece which guardeth yours: and to this purpoſe be (of all things) ſure to have as many guards upon one of your pieces, as thou ſeeſt the enemy doth advance of his upon it.

Thirdly, that thy guardes be of leſſe value then the pieces he aſſaileth withall, for then if either he or you begin to take you ſhall gaine ſomething, if you finde you cannot well guard your piece, ſee whether you can advance ſome piece, of yours in guard to take a better piece for ſo you may many times ſave your endanger'd piece.

Fourthly,

Fourthly, never change piece for piece untill you get the advantage either by taking a Pawne or Noble-man of his for nothing, or diſordering a pawne or two of his which is of very materiall conſequence.

Fiftly, take great heed that you doe not choak up your owne paſſage from advancing your men, and retiring on all occaſions, but indeavour by all meanes to take that liberty from your adverſary.

Sixtly, never play any man untill you have examined whether you your ſelfe are free from danger, and to that end upon every remove of your adverſary, conſider of what conſequence the advancing and retreating of your adverſary may prove, and indeavour (if it may be hurtfull) to prevent it before it be too late.

Seventhly, conſider the maine deſigne of the game, which is as ſuddenly as can be to give check mate, that is as I ſaid before, ſo to check the adverſary King, as that he can neither take the piece checking becauſe it is guarded, nor cauſe it to be taken, nor cover the check, nor remove out of check, which may be done ſeverall wayes, ſo that ſometimes by the loſſe of one or two of your great men, yea, ſometimes of your Queen you may give an unexpected mate, as you may often obſerve in the following Gambetts: I ſhall therefore omit to diſcover unto you the manner of the ſurprizing the Rookes,

or a Queen, or the making a new Queen, of which you ſhall have plentifull examples in the Gambetts.

Laſtly, never let your Queen ſtand ſo before your King, as that your adverſary may bring a Rooke or Biſhop to check your King if ſhe were not there, for then you will hardly be able to ſave your Queen, nor let his Knight come ſo ſafely, that he cannot be taken up to check your Queen and King or your Rooke, and King at one time, for then you will looſe your Queen or Rooke, ſince the King muſt be forced to remove out of check.

CHAP. VII.

Of ſome particular things to be obſerved, with the lawes of Cheſſe-play.

BEfore I come to the Gambetts, I will tell you what a Forke, a ſtale, a blind Mate and a dead Game is.

A Forke is, that when you ſee two of the enemies Noble-men ſtanding in the ſame ranke, and but one houſe betwixt them, advance a pawne, guarded with an other, unto the middle houſe before them both, and you may commonly take one of them.

A ſtale is given when one King hath loſt all his men, and hath but one place left to fly into, if then the adverſary bar him of that place without checking him, ſo that he being now out of check cannot remove but into check, it is then a ſtale, and he that giveth it to the diſtreſſed King loſeth the Game.

A blind Mate is, when one giveth check mate but ſeeth it not, yet it is nevertheleſſe a Mate, though a diſgracefull one.

A dead Game is when only the two Kings are left: yea moſt Gamefters will draw the ſtakes, when they have but a Knight or Biſhop left with their King, and the enemy only his King: For it is not poſſible then to give a Mate b[illegible]e.

The Lawes of Cheſſe are,

1. If you touch your man you muſt play it, and if you ſet it downe any where you muſt let it ſtand.

2. If your adverſary play a falſe draught, and you ſpy it not before you play the next draught, tis then too late to challenge him.

3. If by miſtake you play a falſe draught, and your adverſary let it alone for his advantage till he hath played his next draught, you nor he cannot then recall it.

4. If at firſt you miſplace your men, and play two or three draughts, it lieth in your adverſaries choice whether you ſhall play out the game or begin it againe.

5. The King in changing may not goe into check, nor at any time remove into check.

6. If your adverſary playeth or diſcovereth a check to your King, and giveth you no notice of it, you may let him ſtand ſo for that draught if you pleaſe.

7. If your King ſtandeth in check and you remove a draught or two, the adverſary may not give check when he pleaſeth, unleſſe he removeth the piece checking, or ſome other.

Having now finiſht all thoſe rules and inſtructions that are neceſſary for a Learner, I ſhall for the increaſe of his farther benefit refer him to theſe Gambets which follow, by which not onely he that is a beginner, but alſo an experienced Gameſter may receive ſuch ſatisfaction, as that he will find it worth his labour and ſtudy to be perfect in them, and cauſe him by ſeeing the myſterious paſſages therein, to take far more delight then hitherto he hath done in this moſt excellent and delightfull game of Cheſſe-play.
